The Theatre School at DePaul University is one of America’s oldest and most respected theatre conservatories. For 90 years, we have prepared students for careers in professional theatre. Our highly specialized programs employ a learning-by-doing approach, featuring student work in all areas of production in more than 40 shows each season. Our students learn their profession under the guidance of a diverse and talented faculty and staff of working artists. And all of this takes place in the heart of Chicago, acclaimed as one of the greatest theatre cities in the world. Forged at our founding as the Goodman School of Drama and strengthened by our move to the major urban university that is DePaul, our tradition remains — to educate, train and inspire those who will shape the future of American theatre.

The Theatre School’s graduate conservatory offers three Master of Fine Arts (MFA) degrees in acting, directing and arts leadership. Each is a professional training program designed to provide you with not only the skills but also the experience necessary to help you advance your career. We achieve this through a singular focus on you.

Our students learn from people who know what it is like to work in the business — because they do. The Theatre School has 28 full-time tenure-track faculty who are accomplished theatre professionals and continue their professional work while teaching our students. We also employ more than 50 adjunct, or part-time, faculty who are hired right out of the world-class Chicago theatre community precisely because of their individual expertise. As a professional training program, it is vital that our faculty keep a finger on the pulse of what is happening in the profession so they can bring that knowledge into the classroom.

Learning does not stop in the classroom. Each year The Theatre School produces more than 40 productions — of varying shapes and sizes — to give our students ample opportunity to synthesize what they are learning in the classroom.

Our program utilizes progression-based training with each quarter of the curriculum building on the previous quarter of instruction. Expectations of our students increase each year both in the classroom and in production work.

We have strict capacities for each of our programs which are designed to provide each student with personalized instruction and ample opportunities for practical experience.

The Theatre School at DePaul University was founded in 1925 as the Goodman School of Drama at the Art Institute of Chicago, which can obviously be a little confusing. Yet our story’s twists and turns are a testament to the passion and respect that inspired the school’s founding. This instinct for survival and transformation has driven the school’s nine-decade tradition of excellence in training the next generations of theatre artists.

In its first 50 years, the Goodman School of Drama trained scores of successful artists (Scott Ellis, Theoni V. Aldredge, Linda Hunt, Gloria Foster, Harvey Korman, Eugene Lee, Karl Malden, Joe Mantegna, Geraldine Page and Sam Wanamaker among them) and became famous for its significant contributions to the dramatic arts in Chicago and the country.

In 1969, the Goodman School of Drama created a professional repertory company that shared the school’s stages with its students. That company would eventually become the Goodman Theatre which has built a worldwide reputation as one of the premier non-profit regional theatres in the United States.

In 1975, the trustees of the Art Institute voted to phase out the Goodman School of Drama due to financial concerns, and at the eleventh hour, DePaul University agreed to give the school a new home. On July 1, 1978, the Goodman School of Drama became the ninth college of DePaul University. One observer wrote: “The future has gone from ‘curtains’ to more curtain calls. For that, applause.”

At DePaul, the Goodman School of Drama (renamed The Theatre School at DePaul University in 1985) found new life and expanded its degree programs, faculty, administration, and student body. With the acquisition of the Merle Reskin Theatre (formerly the historic Blackstone Theatre), The Theatre School gave its students a prominent and accessible new home for productions. The opening of the school’s new 165,000 square foot facility in 2013 provided state-of-the-art new facilities for both classroom and production work, including a 250-seat thrust stage and a 100-seat flexible theatre.

The Theatre School is proud of its history. The traditions of the Goodman School of Drama, the resilience forged by moments of dramatic change and many decades of success have built the foundation on which we continue our pursuit to provide the best theatre training in the country.
Chicago has long been recognized as a world-class destination for diverse and groundbreaking live theatre. The city boasts literally hundreds of theatre companies, ranging from small storefront, non-union companies to major cultural centers with multi-million dollar facilities and productions.

We don’t think there is a better place to begin a career in the theatre. And we should know — 90 years of training theatre artists has established The Theatre School as an essential part of the foundation of the city’s thriving arts community.

But that’s just the beginning. Chicago is the nation’s third-largest city and, as such, boasts all the extraordinary activity of a major metropolitan area while retaining the friendly character of a Midwestern town. Attractions include world renowned museums, thousands of restaurants, award-winning architecture (including three of the world’s tallest buildings), an internationally acclaimed music scene, spectacular shopping, championship sports teams, diverse neighborhoods and the natural beauty of the Lake Michigan shore.

The Theatre School is geographically located in the heart of this great city, effectively giving our students a vibrant, real-life, city-sized classroom in which to learn.

The graduate acting program at The Theatre School is a very specific investment. As you know, the decision to put three years of time, effort and expense into any advanced degree can be daunting — even more so a Master of Fine Arts in acting. I can assure you, if you are someone driven to act and invest your life in theater, it will be worth it.

Personal discovery is the basis of any artistic training, and essential to the art of the actor. By engaging in a detailed, relaxed yet rigorous, and deepening exploration of self in voice, self in body, and self in action, The Theatre School demands graduate students to discover the true landscape of their being in theatrical art. This bare self-analysis in action and space leads the student to a multi-faceted evaluation of craft that gets to the center of the purpose of the MFA.

You will be in action, at work, every day, every class. You will develop in mind, body, voice, knowledge and technique in ways you may not have imagined. You will become a much clearer, braver communicator. Your imagination will be required and challenged. You will be dealt with immediately, directly and honestly for retreating to old ways. You will be praised for your ingenuity and bravery. You will be energized and drained in countless cycles. You will be called to make real changes in the way you connect, feel and prioritize your sensations, ideas and existence.

Your investment will come back to you in riches. It will definitely be worth everything you give.

MFA
YOU WILL TRANSFORM
You will participate in the unique MFA Workshop and Company Creation arm of our program in which graduate actors re-discover the ways in which they can be in charge of making theatre. Guest artists from the Chicago theatre community and beyond teach workshops on topics such as adaptation, aerial work, puppetry, solo-performance, devising, film-making and more.

The Theatre School's Master of Fine Arts (MFA) degree in acting teaches dynamic “truth in action.” This highly physical acting program is informed by our Chicago roots and prepares you to work on stage and screen all over the world. The first-year experience is focused on self-exploration, expanding imagination and impulse, and developing life-long skills that support expressivity. The second year intensifies scenic study of a diverse spectrum of theatrical literature focusing on mythic, tragic and comic texts. This year prepares you with advanced skills to tackle the world of the classical play. The third year puts the work in a professional context, connecting you to artistic and industry leaders while refining your entrepreneurial spirit through company-created works and independent film experience.

You will learn from a distinguished faculty of working professionals (most are full-time faculty) who possess a wide variety of backgrounds and expertise. Our faculty have spent many years developing successful, personal, and powerful curricula that mine diverse ideas from great innovators. Among these are Constantin Stanislavski, Sanford Meisner, Keith Johnstone, Michael Shurtleff, Arthur Lessac, Kristin Linklater, Catherine Fitzmaurice, Roy Hart, Moshe Feldenkrais, Irmgard Bartenieff, Michael Chekov, Rudolph Laban, Jaques Lecoq, and the traditional paths of Hatha Yoga, International Phonetic Alphabet and Stage Combat.

You will be inspired by a thousand points of view within a comprehensive three-year progression of acting, movement, and voice and speech curricula. Throughout the three years, you will participate in the unique MFA Workshop and Company Creation arm of our program in which graduate actors re-discover the ways in which they can be in charge of making theatre. Guest artists from the Chicago theatre community and beyond teach workshops on topics such as adaptation, aerial work, puppetry, solo-performance, devising, film-making and more. Guest artists from the Chicago theatre community and beyond teach workshops on topics such as adaptation, aerial work, puppetry, solo-performance, devising, film-making and more.

Equally important to the training you will receive in the classroom is the opportunity to synthesize that learning in the production process. The Theatre School produces over 40 productions each year ranging in scale from intimate black-box, to our 250-seat Fullerton thrust theatre, to the historic 1,300-seat Merle Reskin Theatre in downtown Chicago. All productions are student-designed and directed by faculty, professional guests, or our MFA Directing students. The material we produce every year ranges across the theatrical spectrum — devised work, classics, musicals, theatre for young audiences, and new plays.

You are guaranteed to complete roles in six on-stage production assignments and in one film project during your three years in the program.

CURRICULUM & APPLICATION INFORMATION AVAILABLE AT THEATRE.DEPAUL.EDU.
FIRST YEAR

The first year asks you to explore the question “Who Am I?” as it relates to your own body/mind/feelings/perception. That self-knowledge is then applied towards developing a truth-filled approach to a role, asking the question, “Who Am I Also?” Production work begins in the spring quarter with a first-year ensemble studio production directed by a professional guest or faculty director. Self-generated projects are developed in winter and spring quarters via the actor-as-entrepreneur workshop class.

SECOND YEAR

The second year asks you to explore the questions “What is the World of this Play?” and “How do I Inhabit that World?” You will take a two-tiered journey through classical and modern plays and worlds; scene study consists of texts from the Greeks to Shakespeare to plays currently in production nationwide. Movement, voice and speech work continue to refine your instrument and help you master dialects and the use of period style. You will be continually engaged in rehearsal and performance of plays in the Showcase, Playworks and Studio production series.

THIRD YEAR

The final year of the program asks you the question “How do I enter the world of acting?” and “What do I want to create?” It prepares you for the transition into the profession, delivering powerful new skills for success as working actors on professional stages, in theater companies, on film or TV. Courses integrate the work of the first two years into practical professional application and introduce the business aspects of the profession: investigating self-promotion, the acting business, making industry contacts. Your individual artistry is released through your creation of roles, self-generated work, theatre company creation, culminating in the graduating MFA production, and the Graduate Showcase.

You are already distinguished from many of your peers. But successful arts leaders of the next generation must be equipped with more than passion and audacity; they must enter into the professional world already merging practice with theory.

Two arts leadership fellows are selected each year to benefit from a pedagogy that not only stresses experiential learning and academic study, but also formalizes this relationship by requiring a dual commitment by each fellow as a student of DePaul University and a salaried employee of Chicago Shakespeare Theater. Graduates will enter the field adept in the practice and ethics of the business of managing, producing and leading arts programs.

In your two years in this program, you will work in nearly every area of the theater: crafting contracts for internationally acclaimed artists, spearheading a campaign for education outreach, and working on multiple independent leadership projects. Your work will be complemented by the study of management theory, finance, marketing, human resources — all the tools a business leader in a highly competitive market will need. Throughout, you will have ready access to and guidance from some of the most talented professionals in the industry.

This is not an internship, though you will do your share of the everyday work that makes the defining component of any theater — the connection between artist and audience — possible and successful. But the scale of your decisions may well affect hundreds of artists and audience members on any given day.

The landscape of theater is rapidly changing, but one tenet will remain as true as it is today: the effective leaders of tomorrow must learn through actual practice. Here, you will lead.

MFA EXECUTIVE ARTS DIRECTOR
LEADERSHIP PROGRAM CHICAGO SHAKESPEARE THEATER
In the ever-demanding field of the arts, it is essential for organizations to employ those with the skills and acumen to lead them with sophistication and resourcefulness. The MFA degree in arts leadership is uniquely designed for select emerging leaders who demonstrate the ambition and capacity to succeed in this evolving profession.

Our program is unique in that it integrates graduate course work with full-time employment at the renowned Chicago Shakespeare Theater — distinguishing it from other programs that include standard internships or an experiential component separate from course work. Arts leadership students have a dual, ongoing commitment as an employee and a student, centering on the synergy between the two experiences and, ultimately, developing into leaders with strong analytical, decision-making and managerial skills.

This program is designed for those who seek a challenge — one that could lead to significant personal and professional rewards. If you have the commitment, motivation, and calling to become one of the next generation of arts leaders, I look forward to having you as a part of the program.
Through its dual nature, the Arts Leadership program focuses on training in management, leadership, and cultural decision-making, while students synthesize that training through their employment at Chicago Shakespeare Theater, one of the most vibrant theatre organizations in the country. This experience is coupled with full-time coursework from The Theatre School and from DePaul University’s highly regarded Kellstadt Graduate School of Business, providing students with the tools to be successful and competitive. Coursework and employment components integrate into a comprehensive and demanding experience.

Lisa is a member of SDC and a founding member of the Latina/o Theatre Commons. She received her MFA in directing from the University of California, San Diego.
Theatre artists take the big ideas and conundrums of their time and transform them into living beings in action over space and time.

We are looking for a few visionary artists who want to challenge the world they live in through their work in the theatre. We seek early career directors with professional experience who are ready to hone their craft, strengthen their stance, and take full advantage of the specifically human poetry of the form.

As one of two directors admitted each year, you will be closely mentored by a dedicated and professionally-connected faculty. Our aim is to nurture you as an individual artist with a distinct voice. You will be exposed to many approaches to theatre making, and from those you will develop your own singular style as an artist and a leader.

You will learn by doing. In your three-year tenure here, you will direct six full productions, across a full range of genres, scale of production, and in a number of different kinds of spaces. Additionally, you will take seven full quarters of practicum courses in which you will test your skills and experiment with new tools on your feet in collaboration with actors.

You will work with a talented and highly skilled acting company of BFA and MFA actors. You will learn to create work that takes full advantage of the expressivity of the actor. You will learn to translate concepts developed in analysis into action embodied by people. Additionally, you will collaborate with designers and dramaturgs throughout the program.

Finally, you will be at the center of a top conservatory located in one of the most vibrant theatre communities in the nation. You will connect with the Chicago theatre scene immediately and continually via your full-time faculty, guest artists, internships, assistant directorships and by taking in some of the over 500 professional productions mounted in Chicago each season. You will come out of this program known to the theatre leaders in the city and will be able to step directly onto the scene, ready to connect to the national landscape.

At The Theatre School at DePaul University you will develop your analytical skills, your craft and your sense of theatrical poetry. You’ll learn how to collaborate with every artist on the team. You’ll make connections in the field and know how to use them. Most importantly, you’ll develop a style, a way of working and an understanding of the art form that is uniquely yours.
The focus of the first year is preparation and research. Directing students complete coursework in play analysis, dramatic theory, historical perspective, and organizing ideas in order to collaborate with designers and actors. They then move to transform analysis into action with staging and scene study. Students also take a progression of improvisational acting and scene study in order to become familiar with the acting approach and vocabulary of The Theatre School. Production work will include one assistant directing assignment with a faculty or guest artist in our public production season and a directing assignment in The Theatre School Studio Series.

The second year is a laboratory approach to the rehearsal and collaboration process. We create a dialogue between the nuts-and-bolts of craft and out-of-the-box theatrical imagination. Students also continue their collaborative investigation of the production process with design and technical students. They continue to learn the actor’s process, moving into Shakespeare and heightened text. Production work will include directing a fully-executed Second Year Production in the Healy Theatre (our 100-seat flexible stage) and two full-length productions in our Studio Series.

The primary focus of the third year is the thesis project produced on the Fullerton Stage, our 250-seat thrust theatre. Students also begin their transition into the professional theatre community with an internship. Students can enhance their portfolio through elective course work and will direct one more full-length production in The Theatre School Studio Series.
The Theatre School at DePaul University educates, trains and inspires students of theatre in a conservatory setting that is rigorous, disciplined, culturally diverse, and that strives for the highest level of professional skill and artistry.

The Theatre School engenders respect for self, for others, for learning, for alternative communities and for the profession itself.

The Theatre School encourages creativity and freedom of expression as a part of our commitment to our professional standards and responsibilities. We strive to create an atmosphere that is conducive to exploration and risk-taking.

The Theatre School celebrates the primacy of the imagination in all its work. The theatre is, in a real sense, a sacred place for reflection, awakening, visioning and the development of moral awareness. It is a place to challenge beliefs and to understand the self in relation to others.

This is the only application required for need-based financial aid and is not required for scholarship consideration.

The FAFSA becomes available on January 1 of the year in which you will enter college, and can be submitted at www.fafsa.ed.gov. To have your FAFSA results reported to The Theatre School, enter DePaul University’s FAFSA code, 001671, in the college section.

We suggest you complete the FAFSA by February 15. Submitting your FAFSA by this date will ensure you receive full consideration for need-based financial aid. Financial aid packages are communicated separately from the admissions decision letter and are only prepared for applicants after they have been admitted to The Theatre School.

We embrace the diversity of what we see, what we hear and what we feel. We give voice; we represent people and ideas. Our community engages in lively exploration, between and beyond categories of race, ethnicity, gender, sexuality, class, religion, nationality, ability and artistic discipline. We examine, appreciate and share the complexities of culture through artistic collaboration, and in doing so, create a safe and supportive environment for our students, faculty, staff, audiences and visitors.
