If you were stranded on a deserted island, what is the one book that you would want with you? If you could only watch one television show for the rest of your life, what show would it be?

We have all thought about these scenarios. A fun get-to-know-you game, right? But the actual scenarios that these questions present is a scary one: What stories would you bring with you in the apocalypse? Would we want a story to remind us of our family? Something long, just to keep us occupied? Something meaningful to give us hope? Or would we want a comedy to distract us from the terror of any post-apocalyptic situation?

Anne Washburn’s Mr. Burns, a post-electric play follows characters in an apocalyptic future where they choose to focus on The Simpsons—an unlikely choice for the surviving story of our time, but one that is remembered by many with nostalgia. Beyond pure comedic value, The Simpsons has always been a satirical representation of our world and popular media, a way to poke fun at things around us. It is understandable why a group of people living in the apocalypse would lean on this particular story to give them comfort, as a comedic way to relieve the tension or the absurdity of the world they now live in.

In the midst of tragedy, with death and destruction as a regular occurrence, a divide arises between the necessity for meaning and frivolous entertainment. In the second act, Quincy exclaims, “Meaning is everywhere. We get Meaning for free, whether we like it or not. Meaningless Entertainment, on the other hand, is actually really hard.” Quincy is convinced in the aftermath of the disaster, humanity lacks additional meaning. This is a point that not everyone would agree with, especially in our current climate where without meaning, we seem to be losing an opportunity to make the ever-important difference that is always our goal.

Our group is at an impasse, echoing a conversation that started all the way in Aristotle’s time about the social importance of dramas versus comedies. Whether human beings should create meaning in their art or not may be a moot point in the end as we have an innate need to discern meaning out of chaos. Studies have shown humans interpreting nonsensical stories with full plotlines, developed characters, and relevance to today’s culture.

In a 1944 psychological study, Massachusetts college students who were shown a short film featuring a triangle and a circle moving across a two-dimensional surface. When these students were asked what happened in the film, only one student wrote about geometric shapes. All of the other individuals created elaborate stories about these shapes, creating analogies about escaping bullies or a woman fighting off someone. The circle was “worried.” The circle and the little triangle were “innocent young things.” The big triangle was “blinded by rage and frustration.”

The great debate between creating meaning in our art or leaving it as frivolous entertainment reminds us of what the purpose of art at all is and why we do the things that we do. So, if you were on a deserted island, what is the one story that you would bring with you?

CHICAGO PLAYWORKS FOR FAMILIES AND YOUNG AUDIENCES

Chicago Playworks offers a live theatre experience to students, teachers and parents in the Chicago metropolitan area. It is our mission to provide theatre for children that reflects their experiences in a contemporary, multi-ethnic, urban environment.

Founded as the Goodman Children's Theatre in 1925, Chicago Playworks is the city's oldest continuously operating children's theatre. It has been the first theatre experience for audiences of Chicago's young people for more than seven decades and was one of the first major theatres for children in the United States. In 1997 and again in 2003, Chicago Playworks was honored by the Illinois Theatre Association with the Children's Theatre Division Award, for its outstanding long-term contribution to children's theatre. In 1980, Chicago Playworks was awarded the prestigious Sara Spencer Award by the Children's Theatre Association of America (now the American Alliance for Theatre and Education).

Chicago Playworks is a vital aspect of the training at The Theatre School at DePaul University. Students gain pre-professional experience in an extended run before a most demanding and appreciative audience. Chicago Playworks presents three unique productions to more than 35,000 young people each season and has entertained more than 1 million schoolchildren and families since 1925.

HISTORY

The Theatre School at DePaul University was founded as the Goodman School of Drama in 1925, made possible by a gift of $250,000 from William and Erna Goodman to the Art Institute of Chicago. The gift was in memory of their son, Kenneth Sawyer Goodman, a playwright. Kenneth dreamed about opening a theatre that combined a repertory company with a dramatic arts school, where classes would be taught by professional artists and actors.

In 1975 the trustees of the Art Institute of Chicago voted to phase out the Goodman School of Drama over a three-year period. Luckily, DePaul University stepped in and embraced the Goodman School of Drama to keep alive a tradition of dramatic programming. DePaul's first theatre, The College Theatre, opened on the Lincoln Park Campus in 1907.

Throughout the years, The Theatre School at DePaul University has grown in reputation and stature. Our new home at Fullerton and Racine opened in September 2013 and was designed by the internationally renowned architect César Pelli and his firm Pelli Clarke Pelli Architects.
